which was the first absolute grant of the out-let, the area of which at that time was not determinable. The especial purpose of pro-viding this outlet was indicated in a letter President Monroe wrote in 1818 to the chief of the Arkansas branch of the Cherokee nation, in which he said:

ying west of the western bou. "Ty of the bove-described limits, and as far west as the evereignty of the United States and their "hit of soil extend."

At that period the country lying west of the western boundary of the Indian terriery was unknown and unexplored, and the grant westward was therefore apparently buttless. Neither was it contemplated that Neither was it contemplated that be advancement of western civilization would in less than fifty years envelop this unknown area and the territory far westward of the Indian country be occupied by the whites, cities built and all the elements of American progress introduced. President Monroe's wish that the Cherokees should not be surrounded by the white people was, therefore, not realized, and to this very fact is due the present cession and opening to public settlement of the outlet lands.

The Creek nation baving selected a portion of the 7,000,000 acres granted the Cherokees, a new treaty was made in 1838, whereby the boundaries were adjusted with the same proviso concerning the outlet, but conditioned that if the saline or salt plain on the "great western prairie" (the outlet) shall fall within the limits prescribed for the outlet, the United States reserved the right to permit other tribes of red men to get salt on said plain in common with the Cherokees.

"It is my wish that you should have no limits to the west, so that you may have good mill seata, plenty of game and not be surrounded by the white people."

In 1821 Mr. Calhoun, then Secretary of War, wrote to the Cherokee chiefs as follows:

"It is to be always understood that, in removing the white settlers from Lovely's purchase for the purpose of giving the outlet promised you to the west, you acquire thereby no right to the soil, but merely to an outlet, of which you appear to be already apprized, and that the government reserves to itself the right of making such disposition as it may think proper with regard to the sail springs upon that tract of country."

Mr. Carroli stated that his reasons for protesting were that the mark boat was found in a position at the finish different from that it had occupied at the start, having been, after the start was made, moved into Alum bay, eastward from the Needles, and nearly two miles from the starting point, and that the Navahoe was just astern of the Britannia in passing the line at which the race had started, thus saving her time allowance of fifty-four seconds at the finish.

Mr. Carroli claimed that the race ended at the starting line and not at the mark boat, which, as above stated, was out of position, and which the Britannia passed fifty-seven seconds before the Navahoe.

The committee admitted that the race should have ended at the starting line. It was by the committee's order that the mark boat was moved, it being desired to awarded to the Britannia. Mr. Carroli stat-

Congress, in choosing plans for the nation's Capitol, showed the same inability to grasp the future wants of the people that it has exhibited on many other occasions. The brick building first suggested would not today be considered a respectable city warehouse. Posterity does not know all the influences that brought about the final selection of the architectural plan. Of the squabbles of contending architects history tells something. But like many other men with an inadequate idea of the work before them, the Congressional committee in charge builded better than they knew. They chose a plan which served as the embryo of the present magnificent structure. Gradually the building has grown from this small beginning as the nate Isaac H. Maynard.

The very mention of his name is distasteful to the independent element because of his connection with the Duchess county election case in 1891. They claim that his connection with that case was dishonorable. They opposed his appointment to the bench when made by Gov. Flower. They have criticised his presence upon the bench since then and they now stand ready to give effect to their position by working against his candidacy during the campaign and by opposing him at the polls. In fact, they look upon his nomination as an intended affront to them by the machine.

The most significant one has occurred in Monroe county. The contest there has taken the shape of a fight for the election of delegates to the state convetion. The Cleveland element, headed by John B. They will hold new caucuses and a second convention, and whether they are outnumbered or not will send a delegation to the state convention, which will be seated.

In Clinton county, the home of Smith M. Weed, a fight on the same line is being carried on. In that county the officers of the state administration are taking part. The warden of Clinton prison, a recent appointee of Senator Murphy's, the state assemblyman from Clinton county, a member of the forest commission, also recent appointee of Senator Murphy, and the state mining inspector, likewise an appointee of Senator Murphy, and naturally opposed to Weed, are using every means in their power to balk Mr. Weed in his purpose of sending his own delegates to the state convention. A contesting delegation will be sent from Clinton county by the organization people since Mr. Weed has already carried the primaries and it is said that this delegation will also be seated.

The same sort of a fight is being carried on in Yates county. There the Cleveland leaders have come out ahead, but as a contesting delegation will be sent from that county it is probable that the same policy will be pursued in this instance as in the others, and the organization delegates seated.

All these indications are significant of the feeling that exists. In some counties the

In some counties the Cleveland element is not large enough in numbers to make a successful fight at the polls, but if the warfare is continued and carried on as relentlessly as it has begun the differences will be carried to the poll. There is a large number of the so-called Clevelandites throughout the state who are dormant except when there is such a strife as has now begun. When they enter the field they usually stay and it looks at present as if the entire body of voters of this faction would be called into play before the campaign closes.

In the matter of forest utilization the most important and instructive exhibit is that of the investigations into timber physics, which, at the hands of the chief of the forestry division, has received a new significance. To find such a thorough, well-planned, scientifically prosecuted work begun in a country where forest utilization consists still in the roughest exploitation of the woods, must be a surprise and a gratification to every scientific forester, and deserves the highest praise.

NEW YORK POLITICS.

The Democratic Opposition to Judge Maynard's Nomination.

Special Correspondence of the Evening Star.

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1893.

Within the past three weeks the political conditions in this state have changed very materially. Three weeks ago there was no prospect of an open outbreak between the two democratic factions in this state. The Cleveland people were content with the victory of last year. They had thought only of seeking offices. The Hill people saw that they were content with what they were receiving and therefore expected no trouble in the present campaign. But a firebrand seems to have been tossed into the political woodpile in the shape of a nominee for judge of the court of appeals. The leaders of the machine intend to nominate Isaac H. Maynard.

The very mention of his name is distasteful to the independent element because of the court of appeals. The very mention of his name is distasteful to the independent element because of the court of appeals. The very mention of his name is distasteful to the independent element because of his associates on the state ticket.

Judge Maynard ran 34,000 votes behind the lowest of his associates on the ticket that year and ran about 38,000 votes behind Robert Maxwell, who that year ran for the office of state treasurer. The two elements combined, the independents and the antiprohibitionists, against Maynard's candidacy makes him a rather doubtful nominee. There will also be many strict party democrats who vote always with the party as a matter of principle who will oppose Maynard's candidacy and will cut him at the polls.

It was this intention of the machine, to nominate Maynard, that has been selzed as an excuse for the guerilla-like warfare that has been created in different counties of the state between the two factions. The Cleveland nand him the President will not sanction any opposition to the regular nominations of the regular organization, but the personal influence and the power that he is able to wield in his official capacity cannot suppress the factional lights that have already started.
